Dear ESREA Members and Associates,

Quite a lot has happened since the last newsletter. Not only the ESREA General Assembly and another Presidium meeting have taken place, but also several ESREA networking events. This newsletter will provide you with more information about these events. Among other things, this time there is a detailed report by Larissa Jögi on the first joint conference of the ELOA and RENADET networks last November in Tallin. Also, in the meantime, two interesting new issues of RELA have been published and are well worth a read. Have a look.

But it's not just about looking back. Major events cast their shadows long in advance, in this case the ESREA Triennial Conference of which the key dates have now been fixed: the next Triennial will take place from 24-27 September 2025 in Prague and will be hosted by Charles University. Save this date in your diary!

Finally, ESREA is strongly expanding its collaborative relationships with other partners in the field of adult education. Various activities have already been organised together with EAEA and DVV International to implement the Memoranda of Understanding signed last year. You can find more details on this and much more in this newsletter. I wish you all a good read!

Yours,
Susanne Lattke
ESREA Secretary

News from Presidium and Secretariat

The Presidium held an online meeting on 6 February, to discuss strategic and management issues of the society. Areas of in-depth discussion included in particular cooperation links with other associations, and issues of communication, both internal and external, including the use of social media.

On 2 February, members from the Presidium organised an online-meeting with the network convenors to share experiences and discuss current issues. One topic of concern was the underuse of bursaries which has been noted in the last year. As the fostering of early career researchers is a core element of ESREA's mission, this issue will require more attention in the future. All organisers of ESREA network events are therefore encouraged to inform their participants even more proactively about the scholarship offers in future. However, convenors also noted that many PhD students can benefit from institutional support and are therefore not necessarily dependent on ESREA conference scholarships. In any case, it seemed necessary to convenors to intensify direct contact with the younger generation of PhD students in order to learn more their actual needs and preferences.

All these issues will be treated in greater depth at the next presidium meeting which will take place as a face to face meeting on 2/3 May in Linköping, hosted by the University of Linköping.

And there was this too ...

The ESREA General Assembly 2023 was held on 22 November 2023 as a hybrid event in Bonn and online. It was attended by 14 participants. Members accepted the ESREA Management Report and the Auditor's Report for 2023. The ESREA board was discharged. The members formally decided that future General Assemblies may take place as full online events to facilitate participation.

All ESREA members are requested to pay their annual membership fee at the beginning of the year. A reminder to pay membership fees was sent out in January. Special invoices are issued upon request by the secretariat. If you need such an invoice, please contact the secretariat at: esrea_sec@die-bonn.de.

People in ESREA

New convenors in the PSAE network

The ESREA-Network on Policy Studies in Adult Education (PSAE) has two new convenors. For different reasons, John Holford and Pepka Boyadjieva had wished to step down from this position. As of 1 December 2023, they have been replaced by Borut Mikulec from the university of Ljubljana (Slovenia), and Margherita Bussi from the Université Catholique de Louvain (Belgium).

We would like to thank Pepka and John for their services and wish Margheritha and Borut every success in their work!

Mourning the loss of Srabani Maitra

It was with great dismay that we learnt of the death of Srabani Maitra, Convenor of the Migration, Transnationalism and Racisms Network, who passed away on December, 10th. Srabani was supposed to take a leading role in an online-discussion event on adult learning and migration planned for 7 December. This should have been the first joint event co-organised by EAEA and ESREA, resulting from the new cooperation between the two associations. Her illness prevented Srabani from taking part. We feel her untimely death as a painful loss and will always honour Srabani's memory. Our thoughts are with Srabani's family, friends, and colleagues!

ESREA partnerships: Enhancing links and dialogue between research and practice

Various activities have taken place as a follow-up to the the two Memoranda of Understanding, signed with DVV International and the and the European Association for the Education of Adults (EAEA). An article on this new cooperation agreement has been published by EAEA at <https://eaea.org/2023/11/27/connecting-research-policy-and-practice-a-new-collaboration-brings-eaea-and-esrea-closer-together/>

With DVV International, ESREA is currently setting up a broader framework for cooperation. Research topics that are of interest to DVV International include in particular, though not exclusively, Community Education, and Recognition, Validation and Accreditation. To encourage cooperation on these topics, a call was circulated to ESREA associates in January, inviting them to express their interest in cooperation if they would like to share existing research with DVV International partners and offices, and/or if they are interested in conducting research in the partner countries of DVV International all over the world. The feedback received is currently being analysed and followe-up.

On 15 February, a webinar was organised for university partners in project countries of DVV International. The webinar which was attended by some 40 participants included a general introduction to ESREA and its work by Chair Marcella Milana as well as a discussion session on research topics of interest to the participants.

New Projects of ESREA Members

Horizon project on Lifelong learning, skills strategies and skills mismatch (Skills2Capabilities)

Members of ESREA Pepka Boyadjieva and Petya Ilieva-Trichkova (as a leader of the Bulgarian team) have started work on a new project on lifelong learning, skills strategies and skills mismatch. Skills2Capabilities (2023-2025) is a multi-national collaborative project funded by the Horizon Europe programme for research and innovation (Grant agreement № 101094758) and coordinated by Professor Jörg Markowitsch, 3s Research & Consulting, Vienna, Austria. The nine partners' organisations, including six universities, two public and one private research organization, encompass a geographically and institutionally well-balanced variety of organisations that are well-anchored and experienced in research on skills mismatch. The consortium includes researchers from a variety of different traditions and disciplines and is equipped for pushing the boundaries of scientific know-how on skills mismatch while simultaneously leveraging these insights for policy-makers and practitioners.

The ambition of project is to enable policymakers to better understand, measure and reduce skills mismatches thereby supporting the diffusion and adoption of innovation, the digital and green transitions, inclusive economic growth as well as individual well-being. By looking at skills supply, demand and mismatch in differing labour market regimes it is possible to assess the extent to which systems which are more oriented towards developing individuals' capabilities are better able to satisfy the skill needs of economy and society. The project will also explore the extent to which skills mismatch is associated with individual well-being and how the relationship between skills mismatch and individual subjective well-being is embedded in different socio-economic contexts. Academically, the study will make a significant contribution by producing empirical and practical knowledge of comparative, quantitative and qualitative nature. This will enrich the current scientific debate in the field. It will do so by innovating, testing and enriching classical theories on human capital and capabilities and by providing new empirical research on how skills supply can better meet skills demand by avoiding the pitfalls of purely demand or supply led skills systems.

News from the EU

Shortly before Christmas, the European research ministers reached a political agreement on the joint recommendations for improving research careers.

The recommendation is primarily aimed at retaining talented researchers in the EU and at the same time positioning Europe as an attractive centre for global research talent. It differentiates the concept of researcher and enables the diversity of research professions in Europe to be adequately taken into account. Specifically, the recommendation aims to:

- 1) improve the working conditions of researchers to counter precarious employment and ensure a good work-life balance;
- 2) promote comprehensive social protection measures, especially for researchers at the beginning of their careers;
- 3) promote interdisciplinary careers, entrepreneurship and innovation, recognising the importance of different career paths; and
- 4) reduce persistent inequalities in research careers and market challenges.

The recommendations can be accessed at:

https://eur-lex.europa.eu/legal-content/EN/TXT/PDF/?uri=CONSIL:ST_15135_2023_REV_1&qid=1707920243841

The European Charter for Researchers from 2005 was also updated in 2023. All organisations that employ researchers or provide funding for researchers are encouraged to sign up to the new European Charter for Researchers. The new Charter now contains four pillars and 20 key principles (including gender equality, ethics and research integrity, open science, diversity, research assessment).

The European Charter for Researchers can be accessed at: <https://euraxess.ec.europa.eu/jobs/charter/european-charter>

In addition, the recently developed European Competence Framework for Researchers (ResearchComp) is intended to help researchers specifically to assess and develop their overarching skills. It also aims to support higher education institutions and training providers in adapting their offer to researchers and employers so that they can become aware of the broad range of competences of researchers.

Working Life and Learning: Network Conference at Medway Campus, UK, November 2023

The network has been involved in two online conferences in the past but has now had their first face to face conference in November 2023, at the Medway Campus in England, in partnership with the University of Kent Business School and the Emerald Insight journal Work-Applied Management. Numbers could have been better but the quality of the content, discussions and presentations throughout the weekend was of a very high quality with attendees rating the weekend overall 5/5. The weekend consisted of keynote speakers, research paper presentations, panels, round tables and debates. Delegates were from all over the world including India, the US, France and Cyprus. Delegates represented universities, industry, academics and students. It had been a rich learning community focused on the theme: co-creating towards new solutions.

Our membership on our LinkedIn group continues to grow and photos of the events are on the group page. As a network, maintaining the continuity, we are excited for the next conference which we plan to host in 2025 in Rennes in partnership with one of the other ESREA networks - watch this space.
